Andrea Torres Balaguer's work is influenced by dreams and surrealism, exploring the relationship between femininity and nature through the symbolism and dream transcription technique. Inspired by references to psychoanalysis theory and magic realism, her pictures experiment with the conscious-subconscious. Thinking about the scene-action concept, she creates pictures that suggest stories and invites the spectator to interpret them, searching to experiment with the boundaries between reality and fiction.

Andrea Torres Balaguer (Barcelona, 1990) graduated in Fine Arts from University of Barcelona. After winning the first award of Artevistas New Talents her work has been exhibited in Barcelona, Madrid, Paris, New York, London, Brussels, Berlin, Amsterdam, Miami, Mexico and many Art Fairs in Europe. Her work has been included in private collections like Fundació Vila Casas, Col·lecció Bassat and Universitat de Barcelona and it has been featured in some popular magazines like Harper's Bazaar, Elle France, Marie Claire France and Italy, AD Magazine and Vogue.

In 2015 she was selected as a Commended Photographer for the Sony World Photography Awards, Enhanced category. In 2018 she was selected to be a part of Elles x Paris Photo curated by Fannie Escoulen, dedicated to woman in the history of photography who were hidden from the Museums. She was also the youngest female to have a solo show in the Museum of Montserrat, a prestigious Museum in Catalonia. She has been recently selected as one of the "top 5 artists to invest" in Art Madrid 2019. In 2019 she was selected for PhotoEspaña to represent Spain in Unseen Festival (Netherlands).

In 2020 she was selected for being the image of Art Paris 2020 in Artsy on May 2020 and image of the opera Aida in Opera National de Paris in 2021. Her inspiration photographers are Duane Michals and Annie Leibovitz. She has been recently selected along with other talented women photographers by Dior's Creative Director Maria Grazia Chiuri for Dior Magazine's feature "Andalusian Grace" (2023).
